1. The first step is to identify the problem or question that needs to be answered. This involves understanding the context and the specific requirements of the task.

Gratitude, and a point more about Brick, who, however, it was plain, had not

[illegible]

were they in travelling from the Ditch Gap across the flat that he sarcastically observed "they had been trained by Charles Westhall for a walking match," and, in fact, any man might have beaten them as they passed the Gosnworthy Stand. But it was no laughing matter for those who shared the same fate; for the cackles to send their animals along, and the mending shortly afterwards, the favourite ultimately won by three-quarters of a length from Orloff, while The Gay Decisive was a bad third. The all-absorbing Cambridgeshire came next for decision, and the excitement created was extraordinary, the crowd round the winning post being very great indeed.

The Cambridge race was won by Mr. J. G. Stammers' horse, called the "waggoner." The Cambridgeshire and Merry Hart piece of lead business last year rendered the Clerk of the Scales extremely vigilant, and none but those professionally interested were allowed within the scaling-room. Fifty-four were coloured on the card, and besides these East Lancashire, Vermont, Little Stag, Affidavit, Cantonnade, Gedeon, Watford, The Bally, Cripple, Physician, Agatha, The Major, Balornock, Chocolate, Alex, and the colt by Glenn were imported and with no probability of their grosvonts were inserted unaltered and with no prospect of going to the post. Although there had been some comparatively heavy betting on forty running, it will be seen that the anticipations of the strength of the field were not borne out, as the telegraph-board indicated no more than thirty-eight starters, or two less than on the last anniversary. The most noteworthy scratchings overnight were Trap and Soumise, and those who had thought the first-named a good thing got bit, and found that there was an appropriateness in the affair, and that it was a case of "catch 'em alive!" The abacantes from the card of the fifty-four coloured were No. 2 (Eschequer), No. 9 (Onesander), No. 11 (Baechus), No. 12 (Balham), No. 13 (Port Royal), No. 22 (Weatherbow), No. 25 (Hollyfox), No. 28 (Crisis), No. 35 (Doctor Syntax), No. 37 (The Tartar), No. 44 (Cathedral), No. 46 (Cadeau), No. 50 (King of Clubs), No. 51 (Speculation), No. 53 (Isca). Betting up to the close will be found fully reported below, but we may here briefly allude to the salient features of the final operations. Stockinger increased his position so rapidly consequent on the large outlays on him that he left off at 160 to 30. In all other respects the prices underwent no material alterations, 5 to 1 being taken about Gratitude, 6 to 1 about Brick, Columbia advanced to 10 to 1 (taken kindly), Saccharometer was backed freely at 100 to 8, and there was a strong demonstration tion in favour of the Highflyer's dam colt, who rose so rapidly in the estimation of backers, that he left off at anything over 12 to 1; Ackworth had seen a shorter price, declined to 15 to 1, consequent on his noble owner's commission having been executed, but after the Marquis had been down to see his new purchase stripped he returned to the betting-ring and took the odds mentioned to upwards of £300, to show that his confidence was unabated. Mr. Jackson's last figures were £1,000 to £30, laid in one bet. "His game in the final fully described in the usual place, and from the details it will be seen that Brlek, "the Phantom favourite," as he was termed in the ring, did not realise the expectations of the tremendous trial about which such an uproar was made, and the "patched-up" son of "the Dutchman" was beaten before half a mile had been traversed. The scene at the starting post was of a most striking description, and after thirteen failures, Mr. M'George succeeded in effecting a capital start upwards of an hour behind time. Brlek, as previously mentioned, was never dangerous, an Ackworth won an exciting finish with the 100 to 1 outsider, Tomato, by a head. The Marquis of Hastings wins nearly £30,000, and has been well rewarded for his spirited purchase. His lordship, who was present with his youthful bride, was warmly congratulated on his victory, and terrific cheering greeted the hoisting of the winner's number. The remainder of the sport after the champagne drinking and the giving of stamps and prizes attracted the proceedings until dark, and candles had to be lighted in the weighing-rooms. So dark did the afternoon become, that the last event on the card (the Sweepstakes of 10 sows over the T.Y.C.) was compelled to be postponed until Wednesday, as it was quite impossible to bring it to an issue. Among the good winners on the Cambridgeshire are Mr. J. B. Morris, commotion, as upwards of fifty persons were left behind, and their chagrin when they reached the railway-station can well be imagined. Tom King, the pugilist, especially anathematizing the company, directors, and managers, "all in." It was, however, clearly the fault of the intending travellers, who took things in a quiet sort of way with a vengeance. The train was again stopped at the next station, the Cambridge Arms, and the passengers were ordered to alight. On the first occasion, the prize was carried off by Knight of the Shire. Landgrave, in 1850, also was third in the Cesarewitch, and won the Cambridgehire in the same year.

GREAT MATCH FOR TWO HUNDRED SOVS. BETWEEN HARRY CLASPER AND JAMES PERCY ON THE TYNE.

The British Constitution, an institution by value to be imitated by other nations, proverbially ranks foremost in the biography of the world, not only for its immense sway of genius and capacity, but for choice of manual sports and recreations, which are the liking of the people and the wonderment of all foreigners. Sports from horse-racing downwards, or from pugilism upwards, own their thousands of supporters, and boat-racing, the staple of British sports, is matured and acknowledged by royalty and the labourer conjointly. Few recreations can command so much undivided attention as the latter; it fosters science, skill, activity, and endurance, and is, perhaps, the only sport the masses can go on without that dominant feeling of ungovernable ambiguity which characterises the beholder of a horse race, a foot race, and other engagements of lesser import. To a nation like England, famed throughout the universe for maritime stability and power, it is impossible to dwell on the advantages of aquatic sports too strongly. Englishmen should all be watermen, they would then act up to the dictum of our ancestral nation, and be prepared for emergencies which strictly occur in the era of peace or war. The theory that the sailors of John Bull should all be capable of manipulating the sculls is practically a sound one—there is virtually much philosophy in the argument, and the physical benefits which on all occasions accrue from boating exercise must alone be a proof that all who value the elixir of health should acquire the science, especially when the oar is so very trifling. It has been remarked that an English landman can be transformed into an able seaman in a shorter time than a Copeck could recover from his sea sickness. Hence, so much the better. Private matches almost daily occur. Regattas are annually held in the principal rivers in the three kingdoms, and we cannot see why aquatic sports should not be extended when it possesses so many intrinsic advantages and is of so much practical importance to the people.

The match for £100 a side above noticed was decided on the Tyne on Tuesday last, and as the "Old Noddy," Harry Clasper, the originator of the skill, and the James Percy, more of a veteran than aquatic fame, it may be presumed that the interest taken in the event was only second in importance to the late exhibition of aquatic prowess between Chambers and Cooper, to which celebrities the phenomenon of the age. At the outset of Clasper's career the wagers boats in use were comparatively prodigious—for instance the celebrated Laurel Leaf which figured at the Tyne regatta held in commemoration of the coronation of George IV., measured no less than 35 feet in length; width, 6 ft 2 inches; height, 18 inches; and although reduced several hundred weights, she was fully its times in the weight of modern racing craft, her crew also measuring 15 feet long and 4 oared with lead. Clasper's great boat the St. Agnes was considered a model of perfection. She came off victorious in many cases, but was lashed easily by a London crew at the first attempt, her dimensions being 35 feet long, 2 feet 5 inches wide, 12 inches high, and rowed with outriggers, weight somewhere about 20 stones. Immediately after this defeat Harry's ingenuity was brought fairly into play, and there was no mistake that that defeat did wonders towards bringing racing craft to their present state of excellence. He sketched and plotted, worked and condemned his work, until the aspirant became the master, and the present generation can look on the astonishing structure of the little skiff and thank Harry Clasper for the benefit he has unmistakably conferred on the boatworld of the present day. During the early part of Clasper's career backers were immensely different to the backers of 1861: ability was overlooked, and money a great scarcity, a better proof of which cannot be required than on a certain memorable occasion when Harry collected £4 in fourpenny pieces to prevent a forfeit; we question the firmness of our present scullers under such an ordeal. It has been stated, in fact it is universally believed, that Clasper is the absolute inventor and introducer of the outrigger, and without for a moment attempting any disparagement to the veteran, we will as concisely as possible go back as far as 1823 and see whether Clasper's claim is real or presumed. In an article on "Boats and Boating on the River Tyne," written by our reporter, and which appeared in the Cricet and Aquatic Year, now amalgamated with the Ape and Pilot, of April 13th of the present year, we quote the following, and whether we are right or not, it will at any rate set the agitation at rest, leaving it to Harry Clasper himself to refute and clear the mystery up at his convenience. We should much like to hear his statement.

In 1823 an interesting match was made between the Diamond of Quoshera, and the Fly of Scotswood, to row as usual from Hobbins Quay to Newcastle Bridge. The former crew entrusted the production of their boat to Anthony Brown, of that locality, and he conceived the idea of narrowing racing craft, and placing an apparatus on each side similar to what we now term the outrigger, but his present gladiators acted as trainers. It has and always will be our desire to give the details of important matches in full, omitting nothing that might deteriorate or advance any event in the public estimation, and on this ground we will be ridiculed from first to last by all sincere supporters of the men in the district. If Harry wins, said one, he will only have the credit of a chap who has defeated an old man. These ideas of the match are absolute enough to merit our endorsement, and although we were party to the ratification of the agreement made at Mr. Nason's, Sun Lane, on the 8th day of September last, we were open in our disapproval of the race in the principle, inasmuch as it was a struggle, not between men of equal years and calibre, but between youth and old age, or exactly as we thought, and however much the winner may glory over his conquest we do not desire to have the supposed felicity of chronicle another boat race. As before stated the match was ratified on the 8th of September last. The aquatic editor of the Newcastle Daily Chronicle being chosen stakeholder, £25 a side at Mr. John Young's, Queen's Head Inn, Pilgrim-street, on the 20th final sum of £25 a side was duly posted on Friday evening week at Mr. Nason's, Sun Lane.

It is so many years since the career of Harry Clasper appeared in print that we feel it incumbent on us to do him the justice which his talents as a sculler and to Harry in the north, is as familiar in aquatic circles as a household word. His fame not only lives in England, Ireland, and Scotland, but all over the universe. He has attained popularity, imperishable popularity, through his exertions. He started his career as a carman when in his teens, and through a world of obstacles and difficulties such as no other sculler ever encountered, he has of living career and an earnest to the honourable career of Harry Clasper. To enter into detail concerning the entire career of Harry Clasper would occupy by tenfold the space at our disposal. He has shared the events of victory and the bitterness of defeat on very many occasions, and it is strictly those palpable and galling defeats that have made him the aquatic ley, a noted boat-builder, fixed in the Diamond the first outrigger ever known. The improvement turned out so marvellous that the crew won with ease. There is a popular belief that Harry Clasper, of Newcastle-upon-Tyne, was the inventor of the outrigger, such however was not the case. He certainly added improvements of a practical nature; but the person who first brought this system into use was Anthony Brown, Ouseburn, Newcastle, previously mentioned. About the same time, Mr. Frank Emmett, Don't's Hole, fixed the outrigger on the Eagle; and we believe the Eagle and Canary, built by Joseph Corry, were the first two boats that carried the iron outrigger in England. The former we can set forth as facts. Harry Clasper, however, has established his wonderful lasting reputation as a boat-builder and a rower; and, combining his wonderful qualifications as a trainer, it may be fearlessly said that his like never has and cannot be found in England. Harry is a man of conscientious principles, and, thorough patriot, he possesses in a worldly sense an unblemished credit, and besides being generally esteemed, is held up as an ornament and example of what rowers should and should not do. As before said, many years have elapsed since Clasper's biography appeared in print, and we have at much trouble collected the following account of his principal matches to the present date.

Harry Clasper is a native of Dunston, Gateshead, and is in his 53rd year, being born in the year 1812. At an early age, he worked as collier at Jarrold and the Hetton, and also as under-burner at the Gateshead coke ovens. At the age of 20, he displayed considerable ability as a sculler; and, in conjunction with his brothers, for upwards of eight years in succession, was successful in winning the principal events on the Tyne. After leaving the Northern crews, the ambition of the Claspers' crew tempted them to soar after higher game, the result being that they were the London boat being scarcely half the weight. At North Shields Regatta, on Sept. 5th, 1842, he won a gig race for £55 a side. In 1843, August 7th, they won the four-oared race at the Tyne Regatta, for a sweepstake of half a guinea, being £20 a side, having about the weight of the crew for a silver cup. On Sept. 2, the John Bell, North Shields crew, defeated the Clasper's crew, the latter being £20 a side, and the Championship of the Tyne, £25 a side. On October 14, 1844, they beat the Shields crew for £20 a side, and the champion ship, 1844, at the Thames Regatta, with his brothers, Bill, Bob, and his uncle Harry, with Jack Clasper as coxswain, won the four-oared £50 prize

JOHN HARRINGTON.—We this week give a portrait of Harrington in the Ring, of late years, it will be known that Young Harrington, as he was called, apart from his capabilities, was one of the most respected among the respectable. His contests with Norton, Lynch, Morris, Roberts are well known. But Jack Harrington is dead, and it is with sorrow that we announce that fact. It is pleasing to observe that, as far as worldly aid and human help went, John Harrington had the best. When it was hoped that a little retirement would again bring him forth, the kind-hearted Jenny Welsh did not forsake the poor lad, and in his hour of dark need and necessity Mr. Fred Chandler gave him good aid.

REGENT MUSIC HALL.—This hall is far removed from any similar place of entertainment, and is large, well-ventilated, and elegant in its embellishments. It is approached by a spacious entrance-hall, decorated with columns, &c., of the Corinthian order, and leading to a wide stone staircase. This staircase leads to a vestibule decorated with pilasters, their inter-arches and entablature enriched with festoons, highly ornamented domes, and spandrels. From this vestibule, by means of a flight of stone steps, we arrive at the balconies of the great hall. It also affords the means of approach to the manager's apartments, situate over entrance-hall. Pursuing our course onwards to the hall from this vestibule, we enter the ante-room or crush-room, which is of ample dimensions and beautifully decorated with enriched pilasters, spandrels, entablature, &c., charged with musical and other appropriate emblematical devices; looking-glasses, &c., artistically placed, magnify the variety of the scene, and gives it an air of enchantment. Adjoining the ante-room is the waiters' room, with lifts from the kitchen department, which is constructed beneath the ante-room. We now enter the great hall. The dimensions of this magnificent building are as follow: Length, 106 feet; width, 45 feet; and height, 40 feet. These dimensions are in the clear of the wall. The stage is 30 feet wide and 22 feet deep; it is somewhat lower than most stages, and is brought out further into the hall, and the footlights are sunk, thereby preventing any obstruction to the view. Three sides of the hall are surrounded by balconies, supported on slender iron columns, that at the extremity opposite the stage being of unusual depth. The ends of the hall represent deep shell-shaped recesses, which contribute greatly to its acoustic proportions. The ceiling, which possesses the merit of originality of construction as well as elegance of design, is covered from the horizontal position of it, having five lunette openings on each side for light and ventilation, also five apocryphal fluted openings of oval shape. At the summit of each is fixed a sun-light, which effects the two-fold object of lighting the hall with great brilliancy and also rarifies the upper strata of air with an upward draught from the glass louvers in the lunette openings, ensuring a pleasant temperature at all times. The grosvase of the proscenium is enriched with horns of plenty filled with fruit and flowers, and its centre is formed with figures of "Night" and "Morning;" in the centre of a shield is the architect's monogram. The arch itself terminates on the cuspidate with rich terminals and shields containing the proprietor's monogram. The lower part of the recess of the proscenium is enriched with columns and pilasters of a composed order, and in niches (right and left) are figures of Comedy and Tragedy. Within the recess of the proscenium are also placed busts of Handel, Mozart, and Mendelssohn. There is a range of supper-rooms on the north side of the hall, also a stone staircase leading from it up to the balconies. At the opposite end to the stage is placed a commodious bar with store room attached, also a loft communicating with a bar in the west balcony, thereby facilitating the labours of those engaged therein. The basement under the great hall has five avenues of ground arches intended for bowling-alley; also dressing-rooms for ladies and gentlemen, &c. The whole of the architectural details of the hall are from new designs. The acoustic properties of the hall have already been tried, and are ascertained by competent persons to be of the most perfect order. The whole has been erected from the designs and under the superintendence of Mr. Henry Stephen Ridley, architect, 7, Bridge-street, Westminster; the builder being Mr. Frederick King, Besborough-gardens, Vauxhall-bridge-road, Westminster. The prevailing style may be described as Florentine Italian. The building is, as far as practicable, fire-proof, and every care has been taken to protect the audience in case of alarm, by the erection of numerous stone staircases leading to various modes of exit: no expense or trouble has been spared to protect and comfort the crowds which this master-piece of architectural skill nightly shelters. Our engraving will convey a better idea of the tout ensemble than can be given in words. We have only to add that the artist at the Regent are of the first order, and that the quality of the entertainment is on a par with the excellence of the hall.

THE PRESENTATION OF A VALUABLE SILVER CUP TO ALEC KEENE.—On Friday evening last a very select company assembled at Alec Keene's house in Moor-street, for the purpose of presenting him with a testimonial as a mark of esteem of his many admirable properties. We give portraits of the recipient and a drawing of the ceremony of presentation, and we had intended to have accompanied them with a facsimile of the testimonial, but the work could not be satisfactorily accomplished in time for the present issue. The cup, as we have said, is of silver, weighs 140 oz., and holds two gallons. It was made by Mr. Piesse, of 21, Great Sutton-street, Clerkenwell, and is a very admirable specimen of the silversmith's art. The following is the inscription:—"Three Tuns, Moor-street, Soho." Presented to Alec Keene by a few friends, as a mark of respect and esteem for his straightforward conduct in and out of the ring. October 21, 1864." A splendid dinner was provided on the occasion, and the cup was presented by George Brown, Bell, Red Lion Market, Whitecross Street, who, in a short and appropriate speech, catalogued the line of conduct, always marked out Mr. Keene, and expressed the pleasure with which he handed him so valuable a testimonial of public esteem. Various toasts followed the presentation, and the company did not separate until a late hour. Alec Keene, weight 91 stone, was born 1825. He was beaten by Young Greek; a foul blow decided this encounter. In his next tussle he beat W. Cain after fighting 59 rounds in 61 minutes. He received a forfeit from Grant in 1847. He next defeated Joe Phelps, £100 a side, 11 rounds, 2 hours 45 minutes; September 3, 1847. Young Duncan forfeited to him in the same year. He next met and beat Young Sambo (Welsh) in a £200 match; the mill was in 6 rounds and lasted 19 minutes. He was then beaten by Graz, but fortune favoured him in his next encounter, which was with Hayes; the match was settled in the Forest of Dean, September 3, 1850; Hayes fell without a blow.

THE PRESENTATION TO DAVID COOMBS AT THE REGENT MUSIC HALL.—This interesting ceremony is graphically depicted by our artist. Young Coombes has won so many coats and badges that he might comfortably set up a second-hand clothes mart with his prizes. The public ceremony at "The Regent" was only a well-deserved tribute to real worth.

PIGEON SHOOTING.

COPENHAGEN GROUNDS, MANCHESTER.—A Pigeon shooting Handicap will take place here on Nov. 7, at seven birds each. First prize, £4; second, £1; entry, 2s. 6d. each, to be made on or before Nov. 5, at the Grounds. To be handicapped according to merit, and the competitors must stand at the time of entry whether they intend to shoot with single or double guns. Stamps as usual.

DEER STALKING IN THE HERBIDES.—At Ardvorville Castle, in the island of Harris, Outer Hebrides, Mr. Frederick Milbank has had excellent sport in this forest, having killed 32 stags to his own rifle, 18 of which had fine royal heads, 7 with 11 tines, and 7 with 10 tines. The weather has been the finest on record. Two hundred brace of grouse have also been killed, and probably another hundred brace will be added before the end of October, now that the stalking season is over. DARING DEERLART HYDE PARK, SURREY.—Mr. Boothroyd's house was burglariously entered on Friday night, and the belt advertised to be run for, £20 in money, and other articles were stolen. In consequence of this, the belt advertised to be run for, distance 125 yards, cannot take place. Mr. Boothroyd, however, to prevent disappointment, will give £30 to be run for on the same day, November 23. All entries, of 2s each, to be made on or before Wednesday, November 2, at the house previously advertised.

THE PRESENTATION OF A TESTIMONIAL TO ALEC KEENE, AT THE THREE TUNS, MOOR STREET, SOHO, ON FRIDAY LAST.

(From a Drawing by our own Artist.)

Two swallows, at three birds each, were afterwards got ough. For the first, Messrs. Davis and Moore tied, killing two each, divided. The second was taken by Mr. S. S., who killed all three

CRICKET.

AVERAGE OF THE PLAYERS OF ENGLAND.

The cricketing season of 1864 has been concluded, and we subjoin an epitome of the doings of the professionals. The past summer has been notorious for low scores, not so much from improvement in the batting, but from weak bowling and good wickets. Interest in the game diminishes when the scores extend to such lengths as we have witnessed. The addition of a man on each side would not increase but lessen the total runs, for an extra man in the field compels extra care and caution on the part of the batsman. Surrey has carried on the war with her usual energy and vigour, and under her new captain, Mr. F. Burbridge, has gained a well-deserved success. The performances of her two youngsters, Humphrey and Jupp, as seen from the figures below, entitle them to rank with the first. Unfortunately the breach among the players has not yet been healed, and second-rate elevens still contend in first-class matches. If this continues long, the game may lose the support now so freely accorded by the public. In our list of first-class matches are included such as Surrey v. fourteen of Cambridge University, England v. Thirteen of Kent, and Surrey v. fourteen of Hampshire, because the talent engaged in these contests entitles them to the distinction. The following are the individual averages:—

THREE SLASHING FIGHTS IN THE MANCHESTER DISTRICT.

Three fights in one ring is a rare occurrence in the Home Circuit, but still more so in the provinces. Such was the fact, however, in the Manchester Circuit last Wednesday, the 26th inst., and we are happy to say that everything passed off so comfortably on that occasion that the Ring may safely be considered as revived in the Cotton Metropolis, where, unfortunately, it has been on the decline for some time. The first and principal event was a match between Bill Ingram and Ned Evans, both of Manchester, for £25 a side, and neither man to exceed 8st. 6lb. Immediately after the engagement, both men went into active training, and as the battle drew near, the partisans of each man became confident of victory. William Ingram is 27 yrs. of age, 5 ft. 3 in. in height, and gave the fight at Newington, in the modern Italianism. His knowledge of the gentle art was acquired at old Jimmy Shaw's well-known sporting den. He was backed from Mr. William Fox's, Hare and Hounds, Ancoats-street, Manchester, where he took his beatings under the supervision of Bob Dackem. Bill's flag of war was a neat silk handkerchief, of mauve ground, and light-coloured border. The subject of these remarks has never previously figured in any affair of note, beyond some minor off-hand affairs. Edward Evans is a joiner by trade, and hails from Ardwick, near Manchester. In stature he is 5 ft. 4 in. tall, and 24 years of age. His only previous performance was with Jack Taylor, of Ardwick, whom he defeated on the 10th of October, 1883, in 38 rounds, occupying 42 minutes, for £10 a side. He took up his quarters at the "Booth's," the Kings Arms, Newton-heath, and took his gallop at the Royal Oak Park, close by, under the superintendence of Jack Smith. His colours were a beautiful silk kerchief of tartan plaid.

Mr. George Hardy, of the central rendezvous, the Rising Sun, Swan-street, Manchester, was the final stakeholder, and at that hostile the ceremony of weighing took place on Tuesday, between 12 and 2. Evans weighed 8st. 4lb; but Ingram may pull down 8st. 1lb. We may mention that the final stakeholder received a polite missive from the superintendent of the Barnsley police—that if the parties attempted to fight at the old trying spot, Dunford-bridge, he should be prepared with a sufficient force to spoil the sport and apprehend the persons engaged in breaking the peace. The loss for choice of ground was decreed till midnight, so as to keep the affair as quiet as possible, and Evans leaving won, named Fiddlers' Ferry, on the shore of the Mersey, the favourite locale of the Liverpool fancy, "it being understood that the leading pugilists of the next morning, by agents and their friends took their departure from the London railway station by the eight o'clock Parliamentary. There was a large gathering, amongst which we noticed several celebrated and well-known trainers, and the leading pugilists. A pleasant ride brought us to the appointed place, where the services of the ferry-boats were put into requisition and a descent made upon the Cheshire side of the River Mersey. The veteran commissary, Swankey Greaves, soon found a ring on a splendid piece of Nature's carpet, and in a quiet secluded spot. Evans was the first to shy his leg within the cords of discord, having for his attendants two celebrated hags who happened to be on a visit; Ingram quickly followed, escorted by two friends. The toss for corners was won by Evans, but there was no advantage to be gained. Betting, 2 to 1 on Ingram. "Be tolders of the men were soon completed, and a well-known expert, having consented to act as referee, the gladiators were delivered on the scratch at 50 minutes past 10 o'clock for THE FIGHT.

Round 1—Both men were in splendid condition, but there was a great disparity in their structure. Evans is rather of a lathy build, but Ingram is a chubby, compact, and well-built little fellow, with very broad shoulders, and a head as heavy as a lead. Ingram, by dint of confidence, whilst his opponent was somewhat slow in his movements, but at the same time, somewhat cautious. After the usual amount of feeling each other, Ingram landed a light one on the forehead, and jumped back out of danger; then he invested the heavy twice in succession, Evans going over his shoulder. Tedious sparring, when Bill, having got his man within range, repeated the pile-driver in the belly, when Evans reeled to a close, and, after some good half-minute fighting, both were down.

Round 2—Ingram came over the left eye, from which the claret was flowing freely, first blood being thus decided in Ned's favour. After a little fiddling Evans visited the left eye by way of improving the matter; Ingram was rather riled, and rushed at his man, but was again met with a blow on the old spot, which forced him down to avoid further difficulties.

Round 3—Both quick and eager for business. Close and merry ribbing to the ropes, resulting in both being down, Evans under.

Round 4—Ingram tried his left at the face, but was neatly stopped; Bill, on again, and it was no good, after which they clasped each other by the neck, and both down, Ingram under.

Round 5—This was a rattling bout. No sooner did they face each other than Ingram got over Ned's dial with both hands, ultimately hitting him down.

Round 6—Ingram at first, looking vicious—Bill on the face and then on the body, without a return—sparring and close, both being down.

Round 7—Ingram up first, eager for business. On getting together Bill got the hug on with his left arm, and twisted Evans down and falling on him.

Round 8—Ingram on the body and Evans on the frontispiece, till both were down side by side.

Round 9—Little time was lost in sparring, as they rushed to inflicting Evans a blow on the side of the cranium, and receiving his change in the body. Both down, Ingram under.

Round 10—Good counters on the physog till both were down.

Round 11—Ingram on the body, Evans on the old score over the left eye. Close and tedious.

Round 12—Good exchanges on the face. In the struggle for the fall both fell, and rolled over each other.

Round 13—On getting his man within gunshot Bill let go the painter bang on the nose, cutting it across. Master Edward, not liking the position, hoped both hands would be down at the ropes, Evans's head coming in contact with the middle stake.

Round 14—There was a marked change in this round as Evans got well home on Ingram's face, the latter getting down to avoid.

Round 15—Ding-dong exchanges all in favour of Evans, Ingram down.

Round 16—Evans visited the old wound over the left eye, drawing a fresh supply of claret, Ingram rushed in and both were down.

Round 17—Little damage done on either side.

Round 18—Ingram landed tremendous cross counter on the nape with his right, which completely bewildered Evans, who reeled like a drunken man to the ropes and fell; uproarious shouting from Ingram's corner.

Round 19—Evans came up quite groggy and got down as soon as possible.

Round 20—As soon as Ned scratched, Ingram delivered a flash hit on the nose, sending Evans to grass.

Round 21—Ingram seized the belt trump card, forced the fighting, and immediately rushed to a close, exchanges on the side of the head, both being down at the finish.

Rounds 22, 23, and 24—These were all of one description, Evans was all abroad from the effects of the 18th round, and got down each round.

Round 25—By the careful nursing of his seconds, Evans began to revive, and pulling himself together, got on Ingram's left eye, close and both down.

Round 26—Evans improving stopped Ingram's left very prettily. Good fighting with both hands all over the ring. Ingram down.

Round 27—Exchanges in the face and Ingram slipped down on his knees but jumped up again and renewed the round. Good fighting and both down.

Round 28—Evans came up quite weak, and Ingram succeeded in stabbing him several times on the face. Ned rushed at Bill, and both were down.

Round 29—Evans made a final effort, and the pair stood toe to toe, and punched away till Evans fell through weakness.

Rounds 30 to 37 and last—It would be a waste of space to particularize these rounds. Evans never recovered, but kept getting weaker, whilst Ingram was almost as strong as at the commencement. In the last round Ingram delivered his left with stunning severity in the face, and poor Evans fell back, motionless. His friends seeing he had no chance humanly threw up the sponge in token of defeat, after the fight had lasted exactly 40 minutes.

REMARKS.

It will be seen from the description given above that both men are through game ones. There can be no doubt the best man won, although due allowance must be made for the accidental blow in the 18th round. Although defeated, Evans is not disgraced, for he fought as long as nature would allow. He was much cut up at his fever; 42 cuts and scars of various kinds. The winner made a collection for his vanquished foe, which we hope will be increased with a bumping benefit. The fact that not a single appeal was made during the fight speaks highly in favour of both men. After the Ring was cleared, Bob Dackem, Ingram's trainer, and James Skipton, alias Stiffun, of Norwich, put up their hands to fight at catch weight for a tenner. Dackem is 27 yrs. of age, 5 ft. 7½ in. in height, and weighed about 9 st. 10 lbs.; he was also backed from Bill Fox's. Stiffun is 26 yrs. old, weighs 8 st. 12 lbs., and stands 5 ft. 3 in. in height. Best Webb of Norwich for a five; 42 rounds, 1st round 1st round, 1st round 1st round, 25 a side, 116 rounds, 3 hrs. 30 mins., 21st January, 1881; beaten by Hartley, 410 a side, 82 rounds, 2 hrs. 35 mins., 31st January, 1882; and received £25 forfeit from Bill Boswape, of London; he was backed from Joe Hartley's, Rillman, Munday-street, Long Macclesfield, Manchester, for a tenner. Dackem is a well-known pugilist, and has been in several previous encounters. This was a real slugging ding-dong battle, but Stiffun was overmatched both in height, weight, and length of reach. Although the chances were against him, he struggled manfully for victory, till, at the expiration of 27 rounds, occupying 1 hour and 10 minutes, he was compelled to cry a go.

The remaining pair of operators were Dick Johnson and Alec Stewart, for £5 a side, at catch weight. Johnson is 24 years old, 5 st. 10 lbs. in weight, and stands 5 ft. 6 in. He was also backed from Mr. Stewart's, 20 years of age, height 5 ft. 6 in., and weighs about 9 st. 6 lb. He also hailed from Mr. Fox's. After fighting 1 hour and 40 minutes with pretty nearly equal effect, the police made their appearance, and hostilities were suspended. The referee, Mr. McGraith's, Punch Stewart, was 20 years of age, height 5 ft. 6 in., and weighs about 9 st. 6 lb. He also hailed from Mr. Fox's.
